A Message from our President

Hi Everyone,

Last week I had the privilege of representing Women's Demo at an appearance by President Biden who was in Nevada to discuss the ways the Inflation Reduction Act is helping lower the cost of prescription drugs. Our wonderful Congresswoman Dina Titus was there to welcome everyone to District 1 and the president was introduced by a local gentleman who has benefitted from the reduced cost of insulin. Also in attendance were Congressman Steven Horsford, Attorney General Aaron Ford, Clark County Commissioner William McCurdy, II, and our own Second Vice-President Margie Gonzales.

BABY SUPPLY GIVEAWAY

Last week, Women's Democratic Club was a sponsor of the Baby Bounty Supply Giveaway held at the Donna Street Community Center. Hosted by the Empowerment Now project, over 100 parents and 115 babies were provided for that day. Our very own First Vice-President Rhonda Nolen and Corresponding Secretary ShaRhonda Ramos were there staffing our table and assisting with activities of the day!

April is National Sexual Assault Awareness Month

Take Time To Celebrate New National Monument

By John L. Smith

Those who appreciate the desert's precious poetry smiled a little this week.

They set aside the latest assaults on the West's arid lands to thank President Joe Biden for making official the designation of the Avi Kwa Ame National Monument. It was a rare win for the Indigenous people who hold "Spirit Mountain" and the surrounding region sacred and also a victory for the rest of us.

It was an act of deep respect for those whose cultural heritage has long been treated as an afterthought. Rich with historical and anthropological context and praise for the natural wonders of the protected place, Biden's Avi Kwa Ame proclamation ran more than 6,000 words.

Among its many gems: "For the Tribal Nations that trace their creation to Avi Kwa Ame, the power and significance of this place reside not just in the mountain itself, but radiate across the valleys and mountain ranges of the surrounding desert landscape containing the landmarks and spiritually important locations that are linked by oral traditions and beliefs. Tribal Nations have shared those traditions and beliefs across many generations through Salt Songs, Bird Songs, and other origin songs, which are central to Tribal members' knowledge of the landscape, enabling them to navigate across the diverse terrain, find essential resources, and perform healing, funeral, and other rituals. These traditional and place-based songs connect Tribal members to their homelands, allowing for profound relationships with Avi Kwa Ame and its surroundings and providing healing and spiritual connections even if they are far from home."

Long before there was a federal government, or a guy in a cowboy hat for that matter, Indigenous Yuman-speaking tribes traced their creation stories to the region defined by Avi Kwa Ame, which looks out upon the confluence of the Mojave and Sonoran deserts. The Mojave, Chemehuevi, Southern Paiute hold the area sacred, and it plays a significant role in the histories of nearly a dozen other tribal nations.

Avi Kwa Ame's spiritual and historical importance goes back more than 100 centuries. By comparison, its official designation came in the blink of an eye. It was only decades in the making and the result of the dogged efforts of tribal leaders, legislators, Nevada's congressional delegation, the Clark County Commission, conservation activists and representatives from the communities certain to benefit most from the increased interest in the protected area. The Avi Kwa Ame National Monument Establishment Act was authored by Rep. Dina Titus (D-NV).

In short, a lot of Nevadans spent a lot of time getting this right.

Biden's use of the Antiquities Act of 1906 gave a lot of people much to celebrate. First signed by President Theodore Roosevelt, the antiquities act was decades in the making and has been used nearly 300 times to protect significant cultural and natural resources on federal public lands.

With so much support, and the weight of law and history on its side, it wasn't exactly a controversial call. Today, a lot of folks are cheering about it.

Despite all that, some people found a way to disagree with the decision to grant Avi Kwa Ame protected status. Those who look across the desert landscape and see only its potential for development or natural resource extraction are howling, but not like coyotes. Alas, somewhere in the distant desert, a corporate giant is sobbing over the loss of a potential score.

On the job just 11 weeks, Nevada Gov. Joe Lombardo took the opportunity to decry the designation as an example of a "Washington Knows Best" policy that "might win plaudits from unaccountable special interests," but is a potential killer of jobs, affordable housing opportunities and infrastructure projects. He complained of being kept out of the loop by the administration. In a statement, Lombardo conjured images of arrogant Washington overreach and said the "federal confiscation of 506,814 acres of Nevada land is a historic mistake that will cost Nevadans for generations to come."

Federal confiscation? Who writes Lombardo's material, Cliven Bundy?

Lombardo's remarks were immediately called out by his steady critics at the Las Vegas Sun, and the Biden administration pushed back hard against the flimsy assertion that the governor's people hadn't been clued in by the White House. In part: "(Department of Interior) staff traveled to Nevada for meetings with stakeholders and state leaders in addition to public meetings. Tribal consultations took place in both Nevada and Arizona. We worked diligently with Nevada government leaders including members of the federal delegation."

Avi Kwa Ame was hardly a state secret.

If Lombardo failed to get the memo, he did receive an outpouring of positive press from conservative media outlets that highlighted his complaint and warned that the national monument threatened to lock up "mineral-rich land."

After all that noise, it is instructive to know that this sacred space is not just a land of Joshua tree forests and native cultural heritage, but is also special for what is not there. As the president put it, "The Avi Kwa Ame area's desert location and geography also allow for a soundscape that is among the most naturally quiet in the United States. Additionally, the area's exceptional dark skies, rare in highly populated Clark County, have been noted for the excellent stargazing opportunities they offer and for benefits to migratory birds."

It is a place beyond even the cacophony of modern politics.

At this rare time of good news for our endangered desert, it seems only appropriate to end with a poem. Richard Shelton was thinking of a different arid land, but spoke for many when he wrote "Requiem for Sonora" with its often-quoted lines, "but oh my desert/yours is the only death I cannot bear."

Such words make desert hearts ache, but today I'll end with a reminder from the same poem that the arid land we cherish remains our, "most silent sanctuary/more fragile than forests/more beautiful than water."

How To Handle Bullies

©Carol Chesnut

Bullies enjoy hurting and humiliating other people. Once upon a time, for a clan or family or community to survive, bullies were ostracized, ejected from the community for bringing harm to the members of the majority of the group. And ejection meant death was the probable outcome for that bully and was an extreme deterrent to hateful actions.

Today bullying reigns supreme in the Republican Party. It is certainly Trump's MO and that of all the MAGA members who support him. So how do we handle this bullying to keep those who employ this tactic from destroying our democratic republic and our civilization?

They must be stopped and ostracized! They are terrorists, and we have learned that negotiating with terrorists is not possible. They will just keep amplifying the level of hatefulness and violence they employ to cow the rest of us into accepting their willful ignorance and destructiveness as the norm. Some people even admire their trying to impose their rule of terror on the majority. Thirty percent of our citizens are scofflaws. You can see it in the way they behave when they are driving and in how they vote. Trumpian audacity, cruelty, and loudness has gained a certain elan among them.

On social media, shaming those who do not fit in by cow-towing to the strong has replaced shaming those who damage social norms and the Rule of Law. Our children, and especially our daughters, are contemplating suicide in alarming numbers. Drug use and depression are endemic in the land.

Religion once encouraged us to rein in our lusts and act to benefit the community. Now mega-churches preach self-interest at the expense of the majority as being loved and rewarded by a grateful God. Schools and teachers are being punished for teaching scientific fact and tolerance of others and the valuing of diversity. We must understand the danger and put a stop to the bullying tactics immediately if we are to survive as a nation and as a world that fosters human life.

This is a dire emergency! We must all have the guts to stand up to the bullies, and to mock and shame their behavior. We must eject the uncivilized from civilized society.

Peggy's Place By Peggy Maze Johnson

Do you want to know how to appreciate living in Nevada more? Travel to Idaho! And let me tell you why! I've been in Idaho for the past four days with my Boyfriend (he's skiing and I'm shopping) and I'm learning more than I wanted about this State!

Probably the most egregious laws have to do with abortion. Hospitals here are not doing delivery of new babies because Doctors are leaving the State because of the fear of losing their licenses to practice and perhaps criminal charges if they assist women to end their pregnancies! WOW!

The Governor of this State is one of the most right wing Governors in the Country, right up there with Abbott of Texas and DiSantis of Florida when it comes to the rights of women!

Idaho bans abortion after six weeks' gestation, before many women know they're pregnant. In cases of rape and incest, women seeking abortions must file a police report, a particularly onerous requirement given that most people do not report their sexual assaults—even more so since some have been prosecuted for doing so.

Idaho also allows abortion to save the life of the mother, but it's unclear to many physicians where that line is drawn. The American Medical Association has advised physicians to err on the side of providing abortion care when needed, even if it may conflict with the law. "Caught between good medicine and bad law, physicians struggle to meet their ethical duties to patients' health and well-being, while attempting to comply with reckless government interference in the practice of medicine that is dangerous to the health of our patients," AMA president Dr. Jack Resneck said in a statement late last year.

Still, there are myriad reasons why doctors might hesitate to provide care that their state has deemed illegal, including the threat of civil litigation or of losing their medical license. It's no wonder that experienced physicians, hamstrung by laws that dictate how they can do their job, are leaving states like Idaho. But it's an ongoing tragedy for the people who live in those states, who can't necessarily move, and who are losing the doctors most sympathetic to their needs.

Nevada is by no means a "blue" State and there are so many reasons to be concerned, which is why the Clark County Women's Democratic Club and other Democratic organizations are so important! But going to meetings is not enough, it is time to Rise Up Nevada and make our voices heard! And you know how I feel about ORGANIZING! Do get out and do it! Talk to your neighbors, make phone calls, knock on doors and most importantly make sure to register like minded people and make sure they vote! You can do this! ORGANIZE!
